If you think all festivals are about dancing and singing, think again! In the Southern Vietnamese region of Bảy Núi (Seven Mountains), near Cambodia, people celebrate a unique and exciting event called the Cow Racing Festival. This special event is held after the farmers finish the rice harvest, usually in September or October.

These races are different from normal horse racing because they use strong oxen or water buffalo. Two buffalo are tied together and connected to a wooden plow frame. The jockey (the person who rides) stands on this frame! The track is not a dry road; it is a muddy field that has just been harvested. The pair of animals and the rider run about 100 meters. It's very fast, very noisy, and very muddy—you might even see a rider fall down!

The festival is more important than just winning a prize. It is a real test of the farmer's skill and their partnership with the animal.
